

Two former white supremacists speak at UNO last week

STEVE GERTIG
STAFF WRITER

"I thought he was speaking directly to me," said Tom Martinez, recalling the moment he saw David Duke on late night TV as he was leaving for his nightshift at Dunkin Donuts.

Former white supremacist Tom Martinez spoke at UNO on Tuesday about the before, during and after of his life in hate groups. He has written an autobiography called: Brotherhood of Murder which has been made into a Showtime Original Movie.

Philadelphia in the 1950s and 60s took a downward turn. His Irish Catholic neighborhood previously was not rich or poor. Manufacturing provided jobs. With union backed wages everyone was doing okay.

Then the job market in Philadelphia went south. Not to Mexico, but to the southern U.S. Martinez says it was "to break unions."

It was a tense time of change for everyone.

Mandatory bussing was bringing people together who would have never met otherwise.

"My parents would not lie about our address," says Martinez. This was one of several tactics some parents used to keep their children from going to school with African-Americans.

"They called us honkeys, and we called them niggers."

"My best friend got stabbed to death by a black gang member. Eleven gang members were staring at me and threatened me. I asked

'Can I go to the boys room?' and then I fled the school and never came back. It was two months before my dad found out."

Martinez joined the military to learn a trade.

"I wanted to be a baker."

When he found out he wasn't going to learn a trade, he managed to get out with an honorable discharge.

Right after leaving the military, he and his girlfriend, Susan, found out that she was pregnant.

Dunkin Doughnuts was the closest he had gotten to his wish of being a baker. He was in his twenties, a new father with a dead end job. The American Dream was only a dream.

Then David Duke came on TV. David Duke told him whose fault it was. David Duke told him he was not alone. David Duke told him what he could do about it. David Duke, leader of the Ku Klux Klan, invited him to a meeting.

Not in Mississippi. Not in Alabama. Right

Students, civic leaders and faculty members came together Thursday at UNO's Thompson Alumni center to listen to former white supremacist Tim Zaal speak about his time in the White Aryan Resistance.

Pete Simi introduced Zaal.

"He has a story that is both compelling and is interesting," Simi said.

Zaal began the one and a half-hour long presentation with a PowerPoint before he opened the floor to questions.

The slides included compelling images such as neo-Nazi skinheads marching on the nation's capital in 2002 and photographs of himself - first as a longhaired child of the mid-1970s and then as a shaven-headed, boot-clad thug practicing target shooting in the deserts of southern California.

When the picture was taken of Zaal shooting in the desert he "didn't care that I was on trial. That there could have been federal agents watching."

He was about to serve a year in California's state prison system for assaulting an Iranian couple and their infant son with other members of the group. According to a July 26, 1989 report from the Los Angeles Times, Zaal was the only one of four assailants accused of striking Farzaneh Sadri while she and her husband left a LaVerne, Calif. supermarket. The attack left Sadri, her husband and an African American passer-by who tried to defend them injured.

Zaal felt invincible because of his meteoric rise in white Aryan resistance (WAR). The group was headed by Tom Metzger and built upon a platform of racial separatism and "white pride." Zaal said that Metzger was "like a father-figure" to him. Saying that he had recruited himself for the movement, Zaal felt like his first meeting with Metzger in Metzger's home was "like a homecoming" for him.

Like many leaders in the white pride movement, Metzger ingratiated himself to Zaal, telling him that he had "leadership qualities." Soon Zaal was one of Metzger's top men, recruiting other young, angry or lonely whites in southern California.

That is not why Zaal was in Omaha on a pleasant Thursday evening. In light of the recent discovery of National Alliance activity, Zaal was here to talk about what communities can do to help kids avoid making the same decisions that he made. National Alliance is an influential white supremacist group that has vandalized a bathroom in the Durham Science Center, placing racist stickers in a men's restroom.

Zaal walked to the podium with the ## Student senate debates parking, student lounges and Dead Week resolutions

CRYSTAL R. REID

The sun was shining, the breeze was light and with flip-flops and tank tops, student senators slowly rolled into their senate meeting last Thursday night. Despite the sluggish start, the senate quickly took to heavily debating resolutions brought to the table.

Everything from parking, to handicapped access to dress code was debated. The senate is also currently reviewing whether to switch student president elections to the spring, like the University of Nebraska-Kearney and the University of Nebraska-Lincoln.

The senate agreed to come to meetings dressed with a standard of college business casual.

Chief Administrative Officer Amber Lewis introduced a resolution to cut the title of assistant director for the four student government agencies.

"I've heard from two of the agencies that they don't need their assistant director," Lewis said.

The resolution to cut the title of assistant director passed. Three votes were against it and there were three abstentions.

Aaron Gilliland brought a resolution to the table with an intention to clearly state that students are in support of continuing with the current Dead Week policies.

"There are some rumors that we're losing Dead Week," Gilliland said.

Josh Shipman, Faculty Senate liaison, clarified that the faculty's intent was not to cut Dead Week, but to change the name to something more appropriate, like 'prep week.'

"This is to make it clear that we want it and that we want to keep it," Gilliland said.

Gilliland read aloud the Dead Week policy and made the assertion that there are some faculty members that do not follow the policy at all.

Because of the ambiguity of the resolution, it was sent back for revisions.

A resolution was approved that would ensure that the grade appeal process would be added to syllabuses, because most students do not know how to appeal their grades. According to Student Senator (NAME)? Schofield who went to the Dean's Advisory Board meeting the deans are strongly in favor of adding the grade appeal process to the syllabus.

Gilliland again brought a resolution that demanded that several different campus problems addressed.

Counseling Center offers free services

April is Counseling Awareness Month. The Counseling Center at UNO, located in the Eppley Administration Building room 115, offers free short-term, confidential counseling for faculty and staff and students. Counseling services may include personal issues, academic concerns or career exploration.

The Counseling Center is staffed by licensed and provisionally licensed mental health practitioners who are dedicated to providing a safe and supportive atmosphere where personal concerns can be openly explored.

To schedule an appointment, call 55-2409.

Anderson Cooper's ABC breakfast postponed again

The 2004-05 Academy, Business and Community (ABC) Breakfast Speaker Series presentation featuring CNN's Anderson

Cooper set for Tuesday, April 12, has been postponed. Cooper, who recently has been covering international breaking news, remains on assignment for the network.

Cooper had been set to conclude this year's ABC Breakfast Speaker Series, which is celebrating its 30th season in 2004-05. Sponsored by UNO, it remains one of the nation's longest running speaker series.

Organizers of the ABC series are looking at possible future dates for the Cooper event. Cooper anchors the CNN news program "Anderson Cooper 360." In that capacity, he has covered a wide range of breaking news stories for the network, including the Space Shuttle Columbia explosion, the D.C.-area sniper case and the war in Iraq. Most recently, he has been in Rome covering the death of Pope John Paul II.

Tickets purchased for the April 12 event will be honored at the rescheduled Cooper breakfast. Anyone who would like a ticket refund should call 55-2981.

Program on debating popular diet books April 26

The UNO School of Health, Physical Education and Recreation and the Omaha District Dietetic Association (ODDA) will present "Which Is the Better Weight? Debating Popular Diet Books" Tuesday, April 26. The event will be held from 6 to 7 p.m. at the University of Nebraska Medical Center College of Nursing in Cooper Auditorium, Room 1010. It is free and open to the public.

Students will discuss the principles of popular diet books - including Body for Life, Atkins, Dr. Phil and South Beach - and make suggestions related to diet and exercise for weight management. A panel of ODDA dietitians will be on hand to answer audience questions related to nutrition.

The UNMC College of Nursing is located on the southeast corner of 42nd and Dewey.

For more information, contact Jennifer White at 55-3251.

Gilliland discussed placing student lounges in Durham Science Center and adding benches in a couple of hallways.

"Something has to be done. Students are sitting on floors," Gilliland said.

The resolution also proposed handicapped seating areas in Caniglia Field. Currently, there are handicapped areas in the press box and on the track. Gilliland also pointed out that there are no automatic doors to get to the elevators to get to the press boxes.

"They're kind of handicap accessible," Gilliland said.

The resolution also pinpointed the lack of lighting and security cameras around University Village as well as parking discrepancies.

Unfortunately, the resolution was sent back for revisions.

resolution's format did not work for the senate.

Legislative/Public Relations Officer Alex Williams disagreed with the resolution.

"It needs to be reviewed and shortened," Williams said. He also suggested that they have preliminary meetings before these points are brought forward.

"I think it's inappropriate to use this as a resolution," President/Regent Elizabeth Kraemer said.

Kramer said the resolution is contradictory and redundant, covering a lot of issues that have already been addressed.

"All this is saying is that we want it and need it," Gilliland said.

The resolution was sent back for revisions.

assistance of a cane that he hooked over the podium's edge before he began speaking.

"It's in our nature to be prejudiced," Zaal said, pushing his words through a mouth that was missing teeth. The teeth, Zaal later pointed out, were lost during his days brawling in the southern California scene.

"Lots of people have a good reason for joining racist groups. They're angry. There are problems with immigration," he said.

He spoke of a neighborhood boy that he had groomed to be the perfect racist. He called the boy "a throw away kid" and noted that nobody else made an effort to reach out to him. That boy is now serving time in a California prison because of his activity in the white supremacist movement.

Zaal pointed to this instance and said that children like this "throw away kid" were looking for someone to guide them. No one but Zaal tried to reach him.

Zaal stressed the importance of reaching out to these children before negative groups. He also said that it was critical to not give up on those people who are part of the white supremacist movement.

"Haters are people, too," he said speaking without a microphone, but clearly and loudly enough to be heard throughout the room. He was even heard in the last row where three young, clean-cut, All-American kids sat: one in a red National Alliance t-shirt.

there in Philadelphia.

His daughter was eight years old when the Secret Service arrested him for passing counterfeit.

He lied his way out of jail, saying that he received the fake money as change.

He was supposed to be cutting the counterfeit bills, which had arrived as sheets, not spending it.

His enthusiasm for hate had been waning, and during his arrest, he learned about some of the more violent actions of "The Order". Of all the interconnected hate groups he was involved with, "The Order" was one of the most violent.

Turned off by the violence, he became an informant for the FBI. After that, instead of entering the Witness Protection Program, he started talking to students about hate.

Hate groups have been very ingenuitive with their recruitment tactics. There is a Playstation 2 game out called "Ethnic Cleansing".

A comic called HoloHoax tells kids not to believe that the Holocaust happened.

There is a line of Hitler action figures.

Resistance Records has one million dollars in sales with speed-rock songs such as "Fire Up the Ovens"

Not only are these big recruitment tools for hate groups. They are big money makers.

What do they do with the money beside buy billboard space? In 1985, two military personnel were caught stealing surface-to-air missiles. They were paid thousands for these missiles. One million dollars can kill a lot of people.

One tactic is for attractive young people to approach potential recruits at concerts and parties. They are invited to go to other events, some of which turn out to be hate rallies, Martinez said.

Besides hate groups, he also speaks out against causes of poverty and hopelessness. He knows from experience that poverty is one of hate's best recruiters.

This story turned out all right for Martinez, who got out in his late 20s.

He and his father made up. He and Susan have been married for more than 30 years.

Martinez still tries to get through to people though.

"Hate means prison or death," Martinez said.

Questions for UNO students

BECKY BOYER

STAFF WRITER

Name: Bill Wendt
Major: Political Science
Year: Second year
Hometown: Omaha

1.) Describe yourself in five words:

"Tall, messy, hungry, cheesy and hyper."

2.) If you were a super hero what powers would you have?

"Teleportation."

3.) What person would you like to meet from history and what would you like to ask them?

"Mark Twain, 'So what would you say about all that is going on in America now?'"

4.) Who would win in a fight between Barney and the Teletubbies (and why)?

"Tinkie Winkie has a lot to prove, so he'll fight really hard to regain his former macho reputation. Plus there are four Teletubbies to one Barney. Teletubbies all the way."

5.) What is the best thing about UNO?

"Meeting interesting people, or Aztec's taco salad in the Milo Bail student center."

Web site sells goods online made only in Nebraska

COLLEEN O'DOHERTY
STAFF WRITER

Quick and easy meals, effective health and beauty products and fun, whimsical goods. If any of these items sound good to you, you may just want to check out NebraskaGoods.com, a current business endeavor by UNO graduate Shannon Brown.

According to Brown, she started the company as a way to make some extra cash and she enjoys working with Web sites.

After finding out that there were no other sites like it, she pursued her idea.

The Web site, which went live March 18th, offers goods that are all made by Nebraskans with 10 percent of proceeds going to charity.

An additional plus is the fact that almost all of the products are chemical and preservative-free.

I, for one, actually tried one of the products. The Wond-a-bar ($13.99 for a 2.5 ounce bar) is a lotion for exceedingly dry skin. I have had eczema, excessively dry skin, for years and was surprised to find the lotion actually helped to clear it up. Many eczema treatments contain steroids, while this lotion was just an oil-based ointment.

"If there's an overriding theme in our products, it's that they're natural and chemical-free," Brown said.

Pet products such as dog treats and insect repellant are available ranging in price from $4.50 to $10.

"We're one-stop shopping," said the 1990 business counseling grad.

The Web site also offers plenty of other food products that include easy-to-make mixes of soups, baked goods, condiments and beverages. Most are relatively inexpensive ($5.50 for a soup mix that makes four servings) and look tasty. There is even popcorn that pops right off the cob.

The site itself still has some snags. Not all of the product pictures are up and there are not as many pictures of the finished food products as I would like to see. Otherwise, the site is reliable and the products are solid. The hand-carved jewelry boxes are lovely-looking and most of the other products look good also.

"I like the idea of supporting my state," Brown said.

Sahara: Great kick off for the summer movie season

SANJEL SELIMOVIC

Recently, I had an opportunity to check out a brand new movie Sahara at a Village Pointe theatre. Every time I go there, I spend the first half hour of being there contemplating the logic behind adding that 'e' at the end of Pointe. Once I got past that fact, I was treated to a rollercoaster of good laughs for more than two hours.

Sahara is a treasure hunting movie with an all-encompassing plot that does not necessarily pertain to treasure hunting. It goes off on its own tangents instead, but still manages to pull it all together by the end. Sahara is simply a spectacular comedy. The story unfolds in West Africa where two best friends, Dirk Pitt (Matthew McConaughey) and Al Giordino (Steve Zahn), engage in a treasure hunt seeking the wreckage of an old Civil War ship that they believe has been sunk in Africa. As they sail up the Niger River, Eva Rojas (Penelope Cruz) joins the crew and the adventures kick off. Eva is a doctor working for the World Health Organization, trying to solve the mystery of a plague that has begun ravaging villages throughout Mali. Dirk agrees to bring her along so that she can complete her research. But when they are faced with resistance and an attack by the military in response to their presence, it becomes obvious

Hip Hop Notes

COMMENTARY BY JULIAN IVEY
STAFF WRITER

Did you know the Ying-Yang Twins sing that Whisper Song? I had no idea. That's what makes hip-hop (and life for that matter) strange at times. You get a hot new act that comes out and they never measure up to expectations. Then a group like the Ying Yang Twins only drops hot singles. They came on the scene with "Whistle While You Work" a few years ago and I figured that was their one hit. Since then, they've dropped more hits than LL Cool J and Nas combined. Those cats deserve it because they make some of the best Crunk music out there.

Another artist that came correct was Beanie Sigel. I've had The B. Coming on heavy rotation since its release and haven't taken it out yet. When I looked online, I saw his sales are pretty good for a man in jail.

Since we're on the subject of people in jail, let's address ya boy Corey Miller, formerly known as C-Murder. Apparently, time in the clink is allowing Miller to think about his image. He's decided to change his rap alias to C-Miller because too many people misunderstood his original name C-Murder. Good idea, C.

Lil' Wayne has been trying to clear up all the negative rumors surrounding him lately. Reports are, he dissed Snoop Dogg for titling his hit song "Drop it like it's Hot" after Wayne's verse on Juvenile's 1999 single "Back that Azz up." Wayne says he did nothing of the sort and "[Wayne] made it a hot verse, but [Snoop] made it a hot song." Wayne also said many of the reports of him dissing people were based on his skillful wordplay. He said he tries to stay away from metaphors because he's so good at them that people always think he's talking about someone.

At a recent concert in Scotland a "fan" hit Lloyd Banks in the face with a plastic cup. Banks was so mad he stopped the concert and offered $1000 to anyone in the audience who pointed out the thrower. No one did.

Jadakiss is dealing with more drama. New York City jeweler Sol Rafeal says he loaned Kiss $700,000 worth of jewels and they were never returned. Rafeal filed a police report last week. Kiss has not commented yet.

BET is not going to broadcast this year's Source Awards because The Source still hasn't paid the bill for last year's awards ceremony at the James L. Knight Center in Miami. It seems things are really up in the air at the magazine right now. Benzino has decided to resign from his position with Source. He cited his beef with Eminem, politics and other business partnerships as his reasons for stepping down.

In related news, The Game is on the cover of this month's Source Magazine. He talks about his childhood in Compton and what happened when he went to Hot 97 to confront the G-Unit.

Rumor has it the G-Unit has added Guerilla Black to the crew. A few freestyle mixes have popped up with Black shouting out the popular call. Another addition is supposedly Lil' Scrappy, but who knows how much of that is just from his appearance in the "Candy Shop" video?

I also have 50 and Tany Yayo's response

Mavericks sweep, split weekend softball doubleheaders at home

NATHAN LEETE
SPORTS EDITOR

The UNO softball team hosted two conference doubleheaders against Minnesota-Duluth on Friday and St. Cloud State on Saturday. The Mavericks were 3-1 on the weekend, sweeping UMD and splitting with St. Cloud State, despite missing three starters. Shilo Jorgensen was unable to play due to illness while Nicole Vos and Lauren McArthur were both out with leg injuries.

In Friday's match up the Mavs swept the Bulldogs 5-4 and 4-1. The Mavs were forced to come from behind in game one when UMD jumped to a two-run lead in the second inning. UNO answered in the third bringing in three runs to take the lead. The Mavs tacked on two more in the fifth for insurance, then held off the Bulldogs' comeback attempt in the seventh for the 5-4 win.

In the late game the Bulldogs took an early lead off of a Dana Groom RBI double in the first. The lead held until the bottom of the second when Mandi Daigh brought a run in on a sacrifice fly, then UMD pitcher Brittany Hansen walked a run in to give UNO the lead. The Mavs posted two more runs in the fourth to seal the deal. UNO had six hits on the game, but was given seven free runners by Bulldog pitchers.

In Saturday's twin bill the Mavs split the day against St. Cloud State. In game one, UNO took a one run lead in the bottom of the first. The Huskies answered with three runs in the second. SCSU put up another run in the fifth and two in the top of the sixth to build a 6-1 lead. In the bottom of the sixth, UNO started a rally highlighted by Kelsey Warning's three run shot over the left field fence. The Huskies shut the comeback attempt down and held on for a 6-4 win.

"If we open the door with an error or anything, the other teams seem to capitalize so well," Head Coach Jeanne Tostenson said. "It seems like we haven't been able to do that. We don't have our best at bats with runners in scoring position. We're trying to get a little more confidence in those situations. You still just look for a good pitch and drive the ball."

In game two, UNO once again had to come from behind for the win. The Huskies opened the game with a three-run first inning with a RBI single and a two-run homer. UNO answered in the bottom of the first when Warning scored on a wild pitch. The next three innings were a defensive stalemate as both teams put runners on the bags but failed to score. The UNO offense stepped up in the bottom of the fifth to make the comeback. The bases were loaded off of a single and two walks with no outs when Leslie Svoboda hit a deep two run double to tie the game.

"I was actually looking for a changeup," Svoboda said. "(The fastball) was there so I went with it and good things happened."

Erin Bluml then scored on a wild pitch to give the Mavs the lead. UNO held off Husky comeback attempts in the sixth and seventh to pick up the win.

"The intensity was so much better in the second game," Tostenson said. "I don't know what it is with this group, but we've had to talk about that over and over and over. I think they came out flat the first game. We're trying to raise the heart, the intensity and the desire."

Wednesday's double-header against Missouri Western will be the final home game of the season.

Stock leads UNO to fourth-straight tournament crown with home win

CHRISTEN HARRINGTON
SENIOR STAFF WRITER

Over a sunny and windy weekend at Ironwood County Club, the UNO golf team made history and broke records at the fourth annual Ironwood Tournament. The Mavericks won the championship and junior Amanda Stock overcame gusty winds to post an 81 Saturday and walked away with the individual title at the Ironwood Collegiate Classic.

Coach Tim Nelson gave his opinion on what type of player Stock is and how she contributes to the team as a whole.

"She has played very hard this year. I call her our bulldog, because she works so hard," Nelson said. "She didn't even play her best game this weekend, but still showed determination and finished first overall."

Stock shot a 76 in the first round and an 81 in the second for a 157 total. Her performance over the weekend was the lowest individual total and the Maverick's 661 score for 36 holes was the lowest team total in the four-year history of the tournament. This was the Mavericks fourth consecutive win at the tournament.

UNO topped North Dakota by 25 shots and Minnesota State, Mankato by 33.

The Mavericks had four players among the top seven and 10 among the top 20 in the tournament.

Stock began her day with a double bogey followed by another bogey, but then she settled down to post the lowest score on Saturday. North Dakota's Alexia LaPlante was second in the tournament with a two-day score of 161. Stock, who set the single-round record Friday with a 76, bettered the previous 36-hole record

Tennis team finishes North Central Conference play undefeated

NATHAN LEETE
SPORTS EDITOR

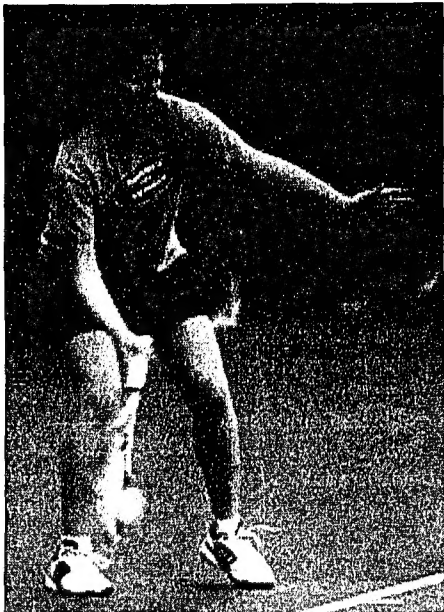

The Maverick tennis team finished its conference schedule with a perfect record after defeating St. Cloud State on Friday and South Dakota on Saturday. The Mavericks are now 15-4 overall and 6-0 in the North Central Conference, and ranked No. 2 in the region.

In Friday's match UNO hosted the Huskies, the No. 3 team in the region. UNO swept doubles competition and only gave up one singles match for an 8-1 victory. Katie Schmidt won in straight sets at the number one spot, and Maggie Russell needed a third session but won at the number two spot. Pam Le also won, improving her record to 14-2.

Saturday the team traveled to Vermillion, S.D. to take on South Dakota. UNO swept both singles and doubles in straight sets against the Coyotes to finish off its conference schedule without a loss.

The Mavericks will finish off their regular season schedule at home Thursday against Washburn. Then the team will be off until it heads to the NCC championships in St. Paul, Minn. April 22.

this movie. Sahara weaves together elements of action and comedy in a perfect combination, with just enough to keep the viewer begging for more. Some may find the humor a little over the top, with jokes inserted in even the most serious of the sequences, but oddly it seems to blend in quite nicely with the overall picture.

Sahara was originally a novel written by Clive Cussler - which carries the same name as the movie - back in 1992. His main character, Dirk Pitt, is a recurring character in many of his novels and it is likely that with a blockbuster success in theatres and on DVD, there will be sequels to come. It is also peculiar to note that this movie was directed by Breck Eisner, the son of Michael Eisner and a CEO of the world's largest multimedia conglomerate, Disney. With Paramount Pictures releasing the first movie, it will certainly be interesting to see whether Disney will try to cash in on this franchise somehow by bidding on the future sequels.

Overall, Sahara is unlikely to disappoint in theaters, and may in fact prove to be an unexpected blockbuster by following in the footsteps of National Treasure. With good acting, plenty of humor and great action sequences, it is a perfect kick off for the summer movie-fest.

I give this movie 4 out of 5 Sanelly's.

of 163 set by UNO senior Tanis Hastmann in 2002 and 2004. Hastmann, who won the tournament the past three years, finished third with an 82 Saturday for a 166 total. Other UNO individual scores included Amanda Houtz with a 168, Sara Wolfe with a 171 and Ashley Sipe with a 174. The UNO team total of 661 was 14 shots better than the previous record of 675 set in 2002 by Northern Colorado. Even UNO's Black Team finished fourth overall at the Ironwood Tournament, led by Allyson Yung and Lynn Mulligan who each shot a 172.

"We're building a lot of confidence in ourselves. We now have a peak at regionals in May," Nelson said. UNO is currently ranked second behind Minnesota State, Mankato in the North Central Conference and the North Region. UNO will resume play this weekend at Minnesota State-Mankato.

Somebody answer this, please

(Yeah, that's right, I'm back.)

I was checking mail on my Yahoo account a couple of days ago, and as I was clearing out junk e-mail, this ad caught my eye, from this company named Jamster. It featured this yellow fluff-ball, which from what I can guess was supposed to be a baby chick. It was bouncing around, along with the words "SWEETY SHOWTIME" and "FAVORITE USA RINGTONE" or something like that. So, after seeing all of this, I made the biggest mistake I've ever made, I clicked on it. If this is supposedly America's favorite ring tone, I at the least have to find out what it is. But after being redirected to their site, and listening to a few samples of this little fluff-ball, I started to wonder, "What the heck happened to just a regular ring-tone?"

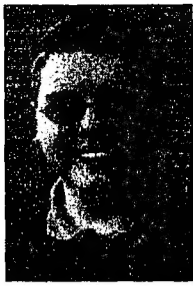

Some of the samples featured included a tone saying "Sweetie, I love you. Now, could you pick up the phone, please?" Imagine this, you're in class, trying to pay attention, and coming from either your purse or your pockets, (or whatever) you hear "Sweetie, I love you. Now, could you pick up the phone, please?" That's a manly man's ring tone right there. (Even for the ladies out there.) You know what; I'd bet $5 to say at least half of the class would either laugh its head off, or look like its in the Twilight Zone, wondering, "What the hell?"

Of course, this isn't the first incident from these morons in the past few months. Just a few weeks ago, their main attraction was this frog (For a while, I thought it was that Gollum character from the Lord of the Rings, or something that ugly.) that was making the sounds of a motorcycle. I've heard better imitations.

But the big insult was something else on the frog. On an advert on TV aired, it looked like he just came from the Garden of Eden, because he was wearing a fig leaf. (Either there or Milan, I hear it's the newest fashion trend.) Trust me; you don't want to know what was under there. Whoever even thought of having that on this frog should be fired, immediately. (If I were in charge, I would not tolerate that.)

But now, actual songs are becoming ring tones. Listen, you want to listen to music, get an iPod. (I've owned one for the past three years, and I love it.) You can get one that holds 120 songs for $99. But even though I like "Extreme Ways" by Moby, (The song accompanying the credits for both Bourne movies) I really don't want to hear it every time I get a phone call. And I'm sure hearing something along the lines as (Insert any Rapper Name here) would not be welcomed too well in class. Yeah, that's a ring tone right there, nothing like hearing every other word bleeped out to tell you someone's trying to get in touch with you.

As Far As I'm Concerned

Matthew Lytle

"But these ring tones will let me know when I've got a call." Well, I usually have the default "Ring Ring" sound on mine. There's an easy way to tell when I've got a phone call, and that's when my butt starts to ring. When the area around what many would call "my butt" starts making the sound of a cell-phone, well then, I pick it up. And even if it turns out to not be my phone ringing, I'll still get my phone out. The on-board clock is more accurate than my watch.

"But these ring tones are a way to personalize your stuff." True, they're a way to differentiate your phone from others, or to make it your own, but some of the ring tones that are out there are, for lack of a better term, stupid. Just listen to some of them. Few are cute, but most are just plain stupid.

Walt Mossberg, personal technology columnist for the Wall Street Journal said this about the whole ring tone annoyance.

"If your cell phone is still just ringing when someone calls, you're way behind the times. According to the cell phone industry, your phone should be vibrating, flashing a photo of the caller across the phone's screen and above all, playing music – preferably an actual clip from a song like 'Drop It Like It's Hot' by Snoop Dogg," he said.

Mossberg also continued when he said, "Of course, you might be one of many people who thinks cell phone ringers that play loud songs in public can be rude and annoying. I know I am."

I agree, and apparently, I've already presented my case. Once again, if you want a music player, fork over $99 and get an iPod. (You'll thank me later.) don't turn your cell phone into one. But, of course, that's as far as I'm concerned.

Finally realizing your potential is essential to growing up

Realizing my potential has never been one of my stronger qualities.

For the last six years, I have done only what was necessary to pass my classes. I rarely go out of my comfort zone to get something done, and if I don't want to do it, I just don't. (Perhaps that is why I've been here so long.)

I strive for mediocrity. Not for A's. For C's. For some reason, my GPA has never really been terribly important to me. I am of the opinion that if you're good at something, meaningless numbers like a GPA will have little impact on whether someplace hires you.

Recently, I believe I had an epiphany. I realized that sooner or later, we all have to take the necessary steps to live up to our potential.

As part of my struggle to achieve mediocrity, I chose to gain my applied journalism credit by writing this blathering column on a semi-weekly basis for this newspaper. I won't say that what I've written has always been prize-winning, or even that it has always mattered to anyone who reads it. Nonetheless, as long as I get the paperwork signed and filled out soon, I will earn my required two hours.

This is where the epiphany has come about. It is possible that I will lay down my arms and concede to getting older and actually write feature stories next fall. Now don't you get up in arms too quickly. Nothing is guaranteed yet. But if I do write feature stories, I'll be doing it just for the experience. I won't even need the applied journalism credit.

Hmm. Doing something I don't need to do? That goes against everything I've stood for over the last half-decade of my life.

The Weekly Rant

Andrew Crnic

You see, I've denied encouragements from a couple of different instructors over the last two years who have urged me to write for this paper. I chose to write columns because they usually come to me easily. They require little to no research, and I generally get to say whatever I want. Feature stories require interviews, multiple sources, proper writing style, etc.

Before I even started writing the column, I was cynical towards this publication. Much cynicism can be seen throughout my columns. To the dismay of certain professors, I am also very lazy.

You would think that when someone claims you're capable of doing "A" work, you would strive harder to do so. Rarely has that been the case for me.

So what is the point of this nonsense you ask? Simple. It's time for me to grow up. It's time for me and anyone else like me to start striving for excellence. Talent can take you so far, but lack of motivation can bring whatever journey you choose to a halt.

I really don't know what I want to do when I graduate in December. I really don't want to be a reporter, but I do enjoy writing. I think I would like to do some editing, but I'm not sure if I'll get to write enough.

Who knows? It's possible that once I graduate, I will never use the writing skills I learned here again. But it's unlikely.

I think when you finally find something you like, you have to give it a legitimate shot.

How ridiculous. I guess this is what growing up is all about.
